

Eve Waltermaurer

Eve graduated in 2005 with a Ph.D in Social/Violence Epidemiology from the University at Albany. Dr. Waltermaurer has conducted research, evaluation and statistical analysis for over eighteen years in areas including: diabetes, behavioral health, alternative medicine, risk factors such as social determinants of health as well as studying the medical and residency educational process in primary care.

She is currently a senior research scientist at the SUNY New Paltz' Benjamin Center for Public Policy Initiatives. She specializes in medical, social and behavioral research including violence, criminology, health, and youth risk/development. She has extensive experience in conducting survey research, secondary data analysis, research design, evaluation, measurement and statistics.